A Brief History of E Clampus Vitus

The Ancient and Honorable Order of E Clampus Vitus is a male-only organization dedicated to the study and preservation of the history of the West, in particular the history of the Mother Lode and mining regions of West.. There are currently Chapters in the States of California, Nevada, Utah, Arizona and Colorado. Also Outposts in Idaho, Oregon and Washington. . Members call themselves "Clampers." Short for E Clampus Vitus. The meaning of E Clampus Vitus is a well-guarded secret.

The history of the organization is steeped in mythology. It is said that the organization was created in the 1840s in West Union, West Virginia, when tavern and stable owner Ephraim Bee was given a commission from the Emperor of China to "extend the work and influence of the Ancient and Honorable Order of E Clampus Vitus." Bee claimed to have received his commission from Caleb Cushing, the American minister to China. West Union has a monument to Ephraim Bee on the site of the old "Beehive" Tavern, where the Rail Trail comes through. The original tavern was destroyed in the late 1800's during a flood.

Bee felt that an organization was needed which was less exclusive than the other organizations of the day, such as the Masons, Elks, and the Odd Fellows. Bee opened membership in ECV to any "upstanding" man who had come of age. It is reported that there were E Clampus Vitus chapters in Pennsylvania, Georgia, Illinois and Missouri.

The organization is said to have been taken to California by an ECV member named Joe Zumwalt, who first heard of it in Missouri. Zumwalt opened an ECV lodge in Mokelumne Hill in 1851, when Mokelumne Hill Lodge No. 1001 was established. There are arguments that previous lodges had been founded in Hangtown, Downieville, and Sierra, but none of those became permanent.

As more of the "established" organizations such as the Masons came to the mining country, they looked down upon the more rowdy nature of E Clampus Vitus. ECV, in making fun of the sashes and ceremonial attire of the "upscale" fraternities, began dressing in red long johns and pinning on badges made of cut out tin can lids. This practice, called "wearing your tin," continues to this day, although the badges are more professionally-made, and members usually dress in a red miner's shirt, black hat and Levi Jeans. ECV titles reflected the tongue-in-cheek nature of the organization. Officials were called "Noble Grand Humbug," "Roisterous Iscutis," "Grand Imperturbable Hangman," "Clamps Vitrix," and "Royal Gyascutis." All members are officers and all officers, the organization professes, are of equal indignity.

Clamper meetings were held in the Hall of Comparative Ovations, generally the back room of a saloon. Some chapters even built their own Halls of Comparative Ovations. One still stands in Murphy's. The Clamper flag was a hoop skirt, with the words "This is the flag we fight under." Meetings were held "at any time before or after a full moon." New members were called "Poor Blind Candidates." They were required to present a poke of gold dust, although the value of the poke was left to the discretion of the brotherhood, and was frequently waived entirely if the prospective member could not afford it.

Despite the humor and rowdiness of E Clampus Vitus, the members did take their brotherhood seriously. When a member became sick or injured, the group would collect food or money to help him out. They frequently trekked through the vastness of the Sierra Nevada to reach lonely miners who otherwise would have had no Christmas celebration. The society was also careful to help out the widows and orphans of fallen members.

At the ECV's peak, around 1870, so many miners were members, that many mining cities shut down during ECV celebrations (some mining towns even had two chapters). At one point, Lord Sholto Douglas, a British peer, leading a troupe of actors in Marysville, was so down heartened by the lack of ticket sales that he had determined to leave town. When a local Clamper found out that the troupe was having trouble, Lord Sholto was immediately initiated into ECV, and the brothers bought enough tickets to fill the local theater. (A 20th Century chapter of the ECV was named for Lord Sholto in honor of this event.) Samuel Clements was a member, and it was while attending an ECV meeting that he heard the story which he wrote as "The Celebrated Jumping Frog of Calaveras County."

Members of note included Philip Armour, the meat packer; John Studebaker, the wagon & automobile manufacturer, and John Hume, a California state assemblyman. ECV also claims Ulysses S Grant, J Pierpont Morgan, Horace Greeley and Horatio Alger as members, but claims have also been made to Solomon, Julius and Augustus Caesar, Henry VIII, Sir Francis Drake, George Washington, Andrew Jackson and Adam (the first "Clampatriarch"). These fanciful claims show ECV's propensity for not taking much of anything particularly seriously - least of all itself.

As the mining industry faded towards the end of the 19th Century, ECV started to fade as well. It was revitalized in 1931 by San Francisco historian Carl Wheat and his friends G. Ezra Dane and Leon O. Whitsell. They were contacted by one of the last surviving members of the original ECV, who passed on all that he could remember of the organization's rites and legends. The three founded a new chapter, Yerba Buena Number 1, or the "Capitulus Redivivus." Wheat described E Clampus Vitus as "The Comic Strip on the page of California history."

New chapters sprang up in Los Angeles and other major cities in California, and were numbered sequentially. However, once Chapter 10 was established in 1936, members pointed out that it was illogical for such a rowdy organization to be so neat in its numbering scheme, and so some creativity was developed in the numbering. The "Pair-o-Dice" chapter in Paradise, for example, is Chapter No. 7-11. The noble "de la Guerra y Pacheco" chapter, halfway between chapter Number 1 in San Francisco and Chapter Number 2 in Los Angeles, is Chapter Number 1.5. There were chapters in British Columbia and Hawaii, but they no longer exist.

The Current ECV

There are currently approximately forty ECV chapters in California, Nevada, Utah, Colorado, Arizona and Washington State, as well as an offshore chapter (the Floating Whang chapter), proposed chapters in Oregon, and Idaho, and a cyberspace chapter (CyberWhang Chapter 68040/481.5).

The organization has raised Historical Plaques in many places throughout the West (often those sites such as bordellos and saloons overlooked by more traditional historical societies), with a traditional "doin's," or party, after its plaque dedication. These are now common in historical areas around California, Colorado and the West - when in the Gold Country, a Clamper-placed plaque is never far away. The fraternity is not sure if it is a "historical drinking society" or a "drinking historical society."

The Beginnings of Al Packer Chapter 100

Al Packer Chapter 100 in Colorado was chartered in 2000 - the year 6005 on ECV's idiosyncratic calendar. This chapter has four encampments statewide for members to get together and socialize. In the early 1990's there being lost souls wandering about the shining mountains, seeking the true light of clamperdom, a town crier posted "Wanted notices." A gathering was held in the Springs near the lower regions of Pikes Peak, of men in faded and tattered red shirts. From this came the nucleus of hardy souls who founded Statewide the Al Packer Outpost. After many pilgrimages to the mountains of the Sierra, with bribes and obeisance to the elders of the Grand Council. A charter was finally granted at the end of the reign of Terry the Sherwood, in the land of the Grand Mesa.

The Story of Alferd E. Packer "The Colorado Cannibal"

This is a story of a man, who if he did not have bad luck, he would have had no luck at all. There are many truths and myths surrounding Al Packer, one of the most controversial are his name. It is alleged he was named for an Uncle, "Alferd" while other stories say it was misspelled on a tattoo. The truth is lost in time but he will always be known as "Al Packer".

Packer was born in Allegheny County, Pennsylvania. He served in the Civil War, on the Union side presumably in an Iowa regiment, but was mustered out due to epilepsy. There is a book "Lone Survivor" that is purported to be his own memoirs that were found in the possession of a daughter of one of his victims. It gives his side of the story, which in recent years has been given some credibility by a forensic study of the victims and the massacre site.

On February 9, 1874, Alferd Packer and five other men departed from the camp of Ute Chief Ouray, near what is now Montrose, Colorado. They were resuming a trek that had begun several months earlier in Provo, Utah, hoping to reach newly discovered gold prospects in Breckenridge, Colorado. While the original party was considerably larger, only Packer (as guide) and Israel Swan, Shannon Wilson Bell, George Noon, James Humphrey, and Frank Miller dared risk the sometimes brutal Colorado winter in search of riches. And brutal it was, as not long after leaving the safety of Chief Ouray's camp, the group was engulfed in a furious blizzard near the present site of Lake City, Colorado.

Packer was next seen on April 16, 1874, straggling into the Los Pinos Indian Agency with little more than a rifle and a skinning knife belonging to members of his party. The story Packer told at that time was that, once the storm hit, he had set up camp while the others went forward in search of food. They never returned, and Packer subsequently headed out for Los Pinos.

After recovering, Packer left for Saguache, Colorado, where by some accounts he suddenly became a 'big spender' at the local saloon. Unfortunately for Packer, in Saguache he encountered several men from the original Provo group who were dubious about his version of the story.

Indian Agent Charles Adams took Packer back to Los Pinos for questioning about the matter, and on May 8, 1874, extracted the first of Packer's two conflicting confessions. According to Packer, Israel Swan had died and the others, being without food, had eaten him. Subsequently, three others had died from exposure and starvation. Then, Packer admitted to killing Shannon Bell, claiming it was in self-defense. That Bell had rushed him with a knife and he had killed Bell with a blast from his Shotgun.

Packer was transported back to Saguache and jailed outside of town, not in the town's jail house as some have told. In August, Packer escaped from custody and wasn't seen again until March, 1883, when Frenchy Cabazon, one of the original prospecting parties, found him quite by accident in Douglas, Wyoming. Living under the name "John Schwartz."

By coincidence, on the day of Packer's escape from Saguache, the ghastly remains of the missing prospectors were found in a valley overlooking what is now Lake City, Colorado. There was evidence of a struggle and foul play. The gravesite is now marked and fenced as a tribute to the murdered men.

In March, 1883, Packer was taken to Denver, Colorado, and questioned again about the incident. In his second confession, Packer stuck with his original claim of self-defense, but admitted to stealing the rifle and $70 in cash from the dead men. Packer was charged with the murder of Israel Swan, the first to die, and was taken to Lake City for trial.

The jury wasted no time in finding Packer guilty of murder, and Judge Melville B. Gerry pronounced that Packer "be hanged by the neck until you are dead, dead, dead..." During the trial, the judge was widely reputed to have said,
"Damn you, Alferd Packer! There were seven Dimmycrats in Hinsdale County and you ate five of them!"
An alternate version of the judge's outburst is "Packer, you depraved Republican son of a bitch! There were only five Democrats in Hinsdale County and you ate them all!"

Packer appealed his conviction to the Colorado Supreme Court where the verdict was reversed. He was tried again and this time found guilty of manslaughter and sentenced to 40 years in the state penitentiary.

After serving only 17 years of his sentence, Packer's cause was championed by a grass-roots campaign in Denver. In 1901, Governor Charles S. Thomas granted Packer's parole request. Packer's memoirs report he worked as a body guard for the two editors of the Denver Papers. It has been reported that he became a vegetarian prior to his death.

Packer moved to Littleton, Colorado, where by all accounts he became a model citizen, well-liked by all of his neighbors. He may have died of natural causes on April 23, 1907, and was buried with military funeral in Littleton Cemetery. Or he may have been poisoned by the brother of one of his victims according to the publisher of his memoirs. It has also been reported that his head was severed from his body, and is on display in "Ripley's Believe it or Not" Museum.

Ballad of Alferd Packer

In the state of Colorado - In the year of seventy-four,
They crossed the San Juan Mountains - Growing hungry to the core.
Their guide was Alferd Packer - And they trusted him too long.
For his character it was too weak - And his appetite was strong.

(Chorus) They called him a murderer, a cannibal, a thief;
it just don't pay to eat anything, but government-inspected beef.

Along the Gunnison River - An Indian camp they spied.
An Indian chief approached them, To stop them he did try.
He warned them of the danger - In the snow that lay around,
But the danger was in Packer, For his hunger knew no bound.

(Chorus) They called him a murderer, a cannibal, a thief;
It just don't pay to eat anything, but government-inspected beef.

Two cold months went slowly by; Packer came back alone.
"My comrades they all froze to death, I'm starving," he did moan.
The Indian chief knew how he lied, He spat upon the ground,
For His belly hung over his belt: He'd gained some thirty pounds

(Chorus) They called him a murderer, a cannibal, a thief;
It just don't pay to eat anything, but government-inspected beef.

Well for nine long years he ran away - But finally he was tried.
He claimed he didn't kill them, He only ate their hide.
That County had six dem-o-crats - Until that man arrived.
Well only one lived past that day: He ate the other five.

(Chorus) They called him a murderer, a cannibal, a thief;
It just don't pay to eat anything, but government-inspected beef.

Eighteen years he stayed in jail, It was a dreadful fate,
For he suffered indigestion - Every time he ate.
Still it's hard to blame this hungry guy - Who went searchin' for the mines,
For when he ate his friends - He'd never heard of Duncan Hines.

(PBCs only, sung in loudly enthusiastic and melodious voices).

They called him a murderer, a cannibal, a thief;
It just don't pay to eat anything, but government-inspected Beef.

I came to Colorado, a stinking PBC,
I know they'r going to hang me, from the nearest tree.
If I fail to meet the test, I know now what I'll be,
You'll see me at the meal tonight, a Packer dinner entree..

NOTE: This Ballad may be sung in part to the tune of "Oh Susanna" and mostly to the theme song from Gilligan's Island. Learn it well, but all better sing it to the same tune.
